HONGKONG, APRIL 27TH, 1868.

It is no disrespect to law, or lawyers, to say that the withdrawal of any great dispute from a court of law for the purpose of settling by private arrangement is almost always of necessity a good thing. This is pre-eminently the case with such proceedings as those of a colossal bankruptcy, in which the absorption of the assets, whatever they may be, by law expenses, is a clear loss to creditors who are already great sufferers. It is obvious, therefore, that the decision given by the Chief-Justice on Saturday must be satisfactory to the majority of persons interested. It may be that the action of the trustees may yet clash in an embarrassing manner with the jurisdiction of the courts in Shanghai, but we are not aware that this is the case, and at all events, nothing could be more inharmonious than the jurisdictions of the Courts of Shanghai and Hongkong, so that there will be nothing lost, even if some difficulties do arise. These could not but have arisen in any case. The bankruptcy of Messrs. DENT and Co. has remained so much of a mystery from first to last, that it is a subject about which we shrink from saying much. About the broad policy of dealing with it privately, so that the community at large remains now very much in the same state of mind about the whole affair, that it was in when the first rumors of calamity reached this colony, a good deal may be said on both sides. The judge has taken strong ground in declaring that the course he pursued was to save solvent firms from the danger of careless allusions, which might be brought out in evidence. Perhaps the only objection to that argument is that it proves a little too much, and if privacy in law proceedings were to be sanctioned in every case where the evidence might possibly be injurious to third parties, the doors of most law courts would probably be locked during the trial of most civil suits, and many criminal prosecutions. In reference to the proceedings in the present momentous case, it can hardly be denied that either one of two very opposite courses, would have been preferable to that which has actually been taken. If the affairs of the firm had never come before the Court at all, but had at once passed into the hands of trustees, a good deal of entirely useless expenditure and painful delay would have been economised, or if, when they were once thrown into bankruptcy, the Court had seen its way to more vigorous and distinct divisions, there could either have been accepted or appealed against, in less time than has been wasted.

It is curious that the Democratic thinkers, writers, and agitators of Great Britain in the present day should stoop to so much hypocrisy as that which they continually display. It is not surprising that a policy of progress amongst people with whom progress is simply another word for the development of Democratic principles, should be a hypocritical policy. That could not be avoided. At the time when the suffrage was an extremely restricted privilege, and the power of the upper classes so completely unfettered in practice that England was, in truth, an oligarchy, those whose sympathies were entirely hostile to the monopolists of power could not venture to promote all at once such changes as we have seen introduced into the Constitution in modern times. It would have been hopeless to talk about household suffrage at a time when a ten-pound suffrage in boroughs only was considered by the majority of those actually in possession of power, as something tantamount to a revolution. The smaller reform had to be represented as if it were considered the end to be attained, and further proposals had to be kept back till time was ripe for them. From the platform of a low, but a still restricted suffrage, it became possible to press for the removal of restrictions which still remained, and that which was before struggled for in the name of freedom, became, in its turn, denounced as an oppressive tyranny. From the present platform of household suffrage, it becomes difficult to see what can be sought for by agitators who have any ends in view compatible with the leading principles of the British Government; but the agitator's political life is over if he once acknowledges that an end is gained. Discontent is the breath of his life. It is a vain notion, indeed, to suppose that the ultra-Liberal party can ever be quieted by the grant of that for which they are asking at the time being. To satisfy a Radical is impossible in the nature of things. He is like a kite, which can only remain conspicuous in the air while its efforts are resisted. Cut the string, give it its liberty, and it falls. Its pretence of tugging at the string, and wanting to get free, is, metaphorically speaking,—hypocrisy on the part of the kite, and the ultra-crisy on the part of the kite, and the ultra-Liberal's pretence of striving for definite results as good things in themselves, is pure hypocrisy in him.

Nothing else can be expected from Radicals, who are simply conspicuous by reason of their political career, but it is certainly surprising to find cultivated men distinguished in life quite apart from politics, fighting the battle of discontent with pleas as hypocritical as any which could be used by BEALES or POTTER. Here is HEPWORTH DIXON, according to the report of an address delivered by him at Brighton, trying to undermine the character of the House of Commons by arguing that, according to the theory of the Constitution, its members should be delegates sent up to convey to the Sovereign the advice of the districts they represent:

He defined the old system of our representative Governments as follows: That the Sovereign had a right to advice and aid from his cities, towns, and shires; that when the Sovereign appealed to these cities, towns, and shires, the whole body of freemen in the realm elected deputies to represent them; that the cities, towns, and shires were considered as actually present in the great council, in the person of their deputies and attorneys; that the deputies attended for the cities, towns, and shires as delegates and servants, who were paid for their labour, and who could sue and be sued for breach of contract. Not only was this the old and true theory of our representative system, but in the major part it is the true theory now, although neglected and overlooked. When the Queen issues her writ, she sends it down to the city and the shire. She appeals to Sussex and Yorkshire, to Brighton and Leeds, not to send up a certain number of private councillors, but men who will deliver to the country the opinions current in Sussex and Yorkshire, in Brighton and Leeds, in the counties and towns. It wants to know what they think; and is it not equally obvious that the message entrusted to the deputy should be delivered to the great council in the very spirit of the town or shire? Yet such is the force of a bad habit of thought, that you will find gentlemen, clever and respectable gentlemen, taking you to send them into the House of Commons as personal advisers! That is a pretension unknown to our ancient parliaments; a position utterly unknown to our laws. Can a politician rightly ask for your suffrages by pledges for your suffrages by pledges for your suffrages by pledges render any approach to him almost unbearable. At the Bible lessons this once frivolous man, now an earnest inquirer, learned where the improvement must begin; and from the day that he confessed his sins against God and man, the disease abated. Some time afterwards he acknowledged one sin he had hitherto concealed, and then he speedily recovered his bodily health, and returned to his home cured in spirit also."

A remark of Mr. Justice Willes, that even the "Peculiar People" would not, he supposed, have left a broken leg to set itself without medical aid, brings out the essence of the difficulty which many very religious people would have in accepting such asserted cures as these, accomplished without medicine, as in any way due to the prayers which preceded them. It would be said, "Do you regard these cures as strictly miraculous or not? If truly miraculous, why do you admit that surgical cases need surgical treatment,—as certainly Pastor Blumhardt and, we believe, also Dorothea Trudel, seem to have admitted freely? Even the "Peculiar People" of Essex don't seem to assert that prayer would cure a broken joint without human intervention to set it properly. Yet pure miracle could as easily rectify a mechanical injury as an organic one; and if the process of your cure be not miraculous, it can scarcely be due to the special intervention of God, but must be owing either to mesmeric influence, or to the influence named by Mr. Gilbert as at least a restorative,—the influence of the mental repose and quietude gained by faith and prayer." But we do not think that,—supposing the alleged cures of these cases given up by the regular practitioners fairly proved,—there would be any occasion or any reason to substitute either mesmeric influence or the rather scanty and purely human influence of quietness of heart for the belief which not only the "Peculiar People," but most people who believe in God, seem to entertain, that prayer has a real place in the Divine system, and is intended, within certain limits, to exert a definite effect of its own on the course of His Providence. The Peculiar People are "peculiar" only, as far as we see, in their distrust of medicine, not in their trust in prayer. There is obviously no kind of sense in neglecting the appropriate physical means of recovery from disease, any more than in neglecting the appropriate physical means of keeping health. The "Peculiar People" would be the first to cry out on any one who should abstain from food in the faith that God would feed him directly. Yet there is absolutely no difference between neglecting food which tends to prevent your being ill, and neglecting medicine which tends to counteract the illness when it comes. The "Peculiar People" would probably call it "tempting God" to pray for food without taking the means to obtain it, when they had ordinary means at their command. If so, it is equally tempting God to refuse quinine (say) in ague, which quinine will almost always cure. The more sensible among the "Peculiar People" do not wholly deny the value of medicine. Pastor Blumhardt, for instance, admitted to Mr Gilbert that he had a limited, though very limited, faith in it. We have seen that Dorothea Trudel had the same limited faith in it. Small faith may be reasonable, for few medicines are in any sense specifics, and the highest medical art now usually dispenses with medicine, instead of dispensing it. But as far as medical skill can really go, there is as little piety in ignoring it as in ignoring the warmth, clothing, and food which are the ordinary conditions of well-being.

The Poyang Lake.

Mr. E. Hepple Hall, who is making a short stay in China during his tour "Round the World," has sent us the following brief notes of travel;—the result of a recent exploration of Poyang Lake from which he has just returned.

"I left Kiukiang on the 27th March, reached Yao-tcheou (foo) on the 30th, and King-te-ching on the 1st inst.—Returning I made the trip inside three days. My route both going and returning was via Wuchung, and my explorations were confined chiefly to the eastern side. Owing to the late heavy rains in that part of the country, the waters in the Lake and tributaries are recruited, and large numbers of boats are engaged in fishing and trading. The crop of hay made on the islands and shoals with which the lake is studded is large, and a large fleet of boats are now engaged in taking it off. These islands, also, abound in game, particularly ducks.

King-te-ching is a large and populous town without walls, but partially defended by batteries guarding the River Po. It is 540 li or 180 miles from Kiukiang via Takatung Wei cheng and Yao-tcheou.

Owing to frequent raids by rebels, and the destruction of many of the larger works, none of the finest qualities of porcelain were now made for sale there. Orders can be executed, but several months are required. The trade has fallen off, and the population also, though is it still a populous place, probably not less than 100,000. The location is good, and the scenery in the neighbourhood attractive.

The Lake, in my opinion, offers successful steam navigation for 8 to 8 months in the year, and a light draught boat of 400 to 500 tons burthen could, if well managed, make a paying business in freight and passengers up Poyang Lake and the Po River, from Kiukiang and Kiukiang."

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Monday Morning.

The drug market has been very quiet for the past two days, with a small amount of business in progress. New Patna has been placed at $647½ cash, and $652½ on credit to the native. Fourth sales to arrive at $652½, from small lots. New Benares at $637½ to $640, cash, and credit. Malwa remains very dull at $675 to $680, with hardly any transactions. The present rates are—New Patna $647½ to $652½, weak. New Benares $637½ to $640, weak. Malwa $675 to $680, weak.

There is nothing new to report in the markets for general merchandize, and business in all descriptions of goods continues of the most limited nature. So universally dull a period as the present has seldom been experienced at the season of the year in this colony, nor but the opening of the Tea season is now confidently looked for to bringing with it a revival in all branches of trade. The only sales reported on Saturday were 200 bales No. 10/24 Cotton Yarn at $120, 5 bales Bombay cargo No. 28/32 at $118, and 40 pieces English Drills at $4.60. We hear of no business in Raw Cotton. and nothing in Produce beyond the sales given below. There has been nothing doing in Shares, and the market remains without change as last quoted. Union Bank are in demand, but there are no sellers even at better than 20 discount, the quoted rate. There are some rumours in regard to the vacancy on the direction of the United Company, caused by Mr. Foster's resignation, having been filled.

In having come under their notice, that there are evil disposed persons in Hongkong, Macao, and Fuh-shan who sell inferior Gold with the shop of OLD OX-SHING on it, and sometimes mixed with some genuine leaf so as to cheat people. In this way these persons try to cheat the merchants, and also injure the business of OLD OX-SHING. Geographical Result of the Abyssinian Expedition.

In a paper read recently at the Geographical Society, Mr. C. R. Markham says:—

The Shohos are a black race, with a rather woolly hair, and small boned: but with regular, and, in some instances, even handsome features. They wear a cotton cloth round the middle, and a cloak of the same material. The head and feet are always bare, and they are armed with a curved sword worn on the right side, spear, club, and bull-hide shield. They cultivate a little dhowarree, and have cattle of a very diminutive breed, asses, goats, and sheep. Their huts are scattered over the plain, while their social places are extensive, and appear to be used by the people for a considerable distance around them. The mode of sepulture is peculiar. The graves are marked by oblong heaps of grass, with upright slabs at each end. A stones with upright slabs at each end. A hole is dug about six feet deep, at the bottom of which a small cave is excavated for the reception of the body. The tomb is then closed with stones, and the hole leading to it is filled up. The plain round Zoulla abounds in antelopes, gazelles, hares, &c., and during the rains the game is very plentiful. The coast rains usually commence in December, but there rains usually commence in December, but there is no great fall, and this year, beyond one drizzly morning, there has been no rain. At Mulkutto, too the thermometer ranged in the daytime from 81 to 90 from December 12th to 18th. Between Zoulla and Howakel Bay good water is found by digging, and there are several wells. Close to the sea there is an extinct volcano, with a double crater 100 feet deep and 300 feet across, and scoria and pumice are scattered over the plain. From Arafali onwards volcanic action is apparent in every direction. The camp at Senafe is pitched on a plain surrounded on every side, but on the south-west there is an amphitheatre of sandstone hills, and rocks. This sandstone seems to overlie the metamorphic rocks in the pass. The hottest point at Senafe was 198·000, and the aneroid showed 22·58 inches, giving the elevation above the sea at 7,464 feet. At this time of the year the sky is usually cloudless, except at dawn, when the fleecy mists roll up the passes, and remain in bed during the day, the temperature ranging from 68 deg. to 78 deg., but the bright starry nights are cold, the minimum descending as low as 45 deg. The plain is covered with grass or stubble barley fields, and dotted with stunted juniper pine, wild thyme, and other bushes. The village of Senafe is at the foot of the grand mass of standstone, rock about half a mile north-west of the camp called Amba-Adasa. It consists of about a dozen houses built of rough stones and mud, with flat roofs, branches being placed in rows across the beams, and covered with mud. Broken jars plastered into the roof serve as chimneys. The outer door, very roughly formed with wooden posts and lintel, leads into a large outer hall, the roof of which is formed of timber pillars. This serves as a stable for cattle and goats, while a mud platform, along one side, is the sleeping-place for servants and guests. Doors lead from this hall into two much smaller chambers, occupied by the family. The population of Senafe is about 240. The inhabitants are all Mahomedans—an upright people with good features, but with very black complexions, and woolly hair done in plaits. The women are slightly darker, wearing a leathern petticoat and mantle, and necklaces of beads. The dress of the men differs from that of the Shohos in having cotton drawers; but their arms are the same. Senafe is the last Mahomedan village; all beyond in this province of Shamnazan are Christian. One of the most interesting points for observation in the Alpine region of Abyssinia is the character of the vegetation with reference to zones of elevation from the Hamza range at 5,890 to the top of Sawayra at 9,100 feet, a perennial water height of more than 3,000 feet. On the summit and slopes of Sowayra the flora is of a thoroughly temperate, and even English character. The only trees in the junipers, while the most common plants are lavender, wild thyme, dog rose, violets, cowslips, and composite. The sandstone plateau here the same flora, but on the lower slopes of the hills bounding the valleys it is enriched by many trees and shrubs of a warmer clime. Italian here mingles with English vegetation. In the lovely gorge of Rarahu, on the western side of the Mai-Mona valley, which is rendered sacred by the shrine and church of the Abyssinian saint, Bounaza, and his fellow-saints, masses of maiden-hair fern droop over the clear crystal water, and the undergrowth consists of a myrsine, a large lobelia, and solanum. At this elevation the vegetation also is that of Somhay giants commences. Huge and venerable dabro trees grow near the villages, and afford shelter for flocks of pigeons and tamarinds, &c. But the English traveller, ascending Mount Sowayra, can not descend lower than Ravagadly, 6,000 feet above the sea, and they disappear altogether in the Hamza gorge, where there is nothing but acacias and mimosa. Thus the temperate flora may be said to extend over a zone from 9,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea; the sub-tropical from 6,000 to 3,000; and the dry-tropical zone vegetation from 3,000 to the sea. The great central valleys are, as a rule, bare of trees, the dahros and acacias only occurring in sheltered places near the villages, although the leftier plateaus are pretty thickly covered with low juniper trees, overgrown with clematis.

On Shooting.

But without further moralising upon the edition of game preserving, let us proceed to examine what are likely to be the effects produced upon the general interests of shooting in consequence of the introduction of the breech-loader. We have little hesitation in recording our opinion that its substitution for the muzzle-loader will, in the end, produce no less radical a revolution in the history of this widely-spread pastime than was caused, half a century ago, by the discovery and introduction of the percussion system. Few more striking and pregnant instances of British adherence to tradition can be found than was manifested, between the years 1815 and 1820, by the reluctance of soldiers to accept any other weapon than the flint-lock musket, which had won Alburera and Salamanca, Toulouse and Waterloo. None of our historical soldiers were more ready in most cases to declare themselves unfit and peremptory reformers than the fossily of the Navy-ren. And yet we find Sir Charles James Napier, the conqueror of Scinde, emphatically protesting, in or about the year 1818, against the introduction of a percussion musket, which, as he insisted, would indeed soldiers armed with it, to fire too rapidly, and to throw away half their shots. We fancy that we have heard some such language uttered too, with more show of reason, in regard to the recent armament of our infantry with breech-loaders. Less indisposition, however, to accept a weapon which was evidently destined to be the fire-arm of the future, was exhibited between 1815 and 1820 by the British sportsman and by British soldiers. It will be remembered that we owe the discovery of the percussion principle of igniting gunpowder in muskets by means of detonating powder to the ingenuity of a clergyman. This is not, par parenthese, the only improvement in the science of destruction for which we are indebted to gentlemen of the same colored cloth. So long ago as 1807 the Rev. Mr. Forsyth took out the first patent for a percussion musket, nor is it possible even for the least imaginative of men to notice this date without indulging in a passing day-dream upon the possible effects which Mr. Forsyth's discovery might have produced if it had been utilised, during the eight years which followed its publication, by the army of the Duke of Wellington. Nothing, however, was more natural than that the nation, locked, as it was, in a life-and-death grapple with Napoleon should have had little time or inclination for the investigation of inventions. It was reserved for sportsmen to introduce detonating guns to the favourable notice of the public, and between 1820 and 1830 their use became general. It was in 1822 that Colonel Hawker, while admiring for himself credit as the adapter of the copper cap, instituted a comparison between a duck-gun with detonating lock, and another with flint lock, and demonstrated to his own satisfaction the superiority of the latter. Nevertheless, at this very moment, all the successful young shots of England were revelling in the rapidity of ignition, and the certainty of explosion, which were the characteristics of the detonator in contradistinction to the flint-lock small-arm. But it is amusing to observe that the slowness of motion, and the disposition to regard all improvement as innovation, which we are accustomed to consider the peculiarities of "the departments" in our own day, were no less markedly discernible in the War Office which had recently conducted England in safety through the greatest struggle she has ever known, and in the mind of the most distinguished soldier whom our country has produced.—St. Paul's.
